DR. F. A. H. LEUCHS

To our Friend and Adviser Dr. F. A. H. Leuchs we, the Senior Class dedicate our issue of the COMET. As a disciplinarian he has been kind, as a teacher he has been to us all that the name implies, and as a friend he has helped us on the rough spots in our four years here.

He has given to us unstintingly and we return the small thanks that we have to offer.

Sonnets to Blanche

SIDNEY BRENNER

I

From the cruel hand of all-effacing time,
To shield your beauty or preserve your name,
To distill your being in songs sublime,
And swell with their echoes the place of fame,
Some pen more subtle and more firm than mine,
Prompted by brain more clear and soul more rich
In truth, in beauty, in accords divine,
Will write, and grave you in a deathless niche.

For many months your name was all my thought,
Your face was in my heart, enshrined in light,
You were my dream and all my fancy wrought,
You were my breath, my waking and my night.
The strings vibrate to music born of you,
Sweet be the melody, the chords all true!

II

When first I beheld your face, my heart
Would scarce believe that which the eye did tell.
Whether the hand of nature or of art
Had worked the rare perfection which did dwell
About you, in a cloud of modest glory.
What sunset had poured from a harvest sky
To robe you in gold and in porphyry?
What lost constellation flamed potently

In the undulating sea of your hair?
Thus did admiration with doubt contend
And fret my spirit with a light despair
For a little while, then did all doubts end.
Your age-old eyes, deepening, proved you blest,
Of all the earth, the loveliest and the best.

III

The modest glory of the morning sun,
The wistful murmuring of wind-wooed trees,
The trembling curtain which the clouds have spun,
Maiden, you are less palpable than these.
The silver shadow of the first star-light,
The limpid distances of vast blue space,
A clear stream of song in tenuous flight,
Merge in a pattern of delicate grace.

A white lily glowing in an amber twilight,
Makes silent music in a perfumed place,
A breeze, fragrantly flowing, instill delight
Traces the form of you, kisses the face.
Sweet was that music, and the breeze serene,
Lost are the scattered fragments of that dream.

IV

Once, when my wit was smaller than my pain,
(The song discordant and the perfume gone)
I cried that I was giving without gain,
And wasting my substance on love forlorn,
Now, in the silence of departing day
I sit. About me are heaped the treasures
Which you gave me: Here is a hint of May,
Wide fields, blue horizons and green pastures,

Here is a wisp of song, a flying glance,
A golden tendril drooping wistfully,
Here you sway in a momentary dance
And here is a smile that you threw to me.
Indeed a royal bounty, freely given
And loudly I cry my praises to heaven.

V

I have loved, and the love that I have felt
Has been a cry of yearning for a star.
I have lived, and the house wherein I dwelt,
Was fashioned out of longing and despair.
It is springtime, and always in the spring
The young leaves in the arbors laugh and play,
The fountains in the gardens clearly sing
They toss their hands about them and are gay.

White maidens in the meadows shyly call,
And blossoms crowd about them in a throng;
It is spring but for me no flowers fall,
For me there is no springtime and no song.
What though my spring-time bade me not rejoice?
The darkness brings me echoes of your voice.

VI

Some there are who were made to walk alone,
To beat a path through a starless darkness
To find no haven when the light is gone,
To wander grimly in the wilderness.
Some there are who ever shall be denied
The laughing caress of sweet loves bringing;
Some there are for whom love shall be a tide
On arid cliffs endlessly up-flinging.

Look! it seems I have grown strong in sorrow;
I have loved, given much, not thought of gain,
Nor asked aught, nor made pretense to borrow
What anothers having forbade me to attain.
I have known your face and I am content;
My life is rich, my days not vainly spent.

VII

A slow wind drifts through a haggard tree,
And moans a song of mourning from afar;
A lone wave rises in a distant sea,
But high upon its bosom rides a star.
What if my reach was smaller than my grasp
What if my mast was not so tall a spar,
What if I yearned for what I could not clasp,
When high upon my bosom rides a star?

In my bosom and in my blood and being,
In my brain and in all my thought and doing,
In my eyes and in all my sight and seeing,
In my rest and all sweet sleeps' renewing,
You are, and shall remain so, endlessly.
Without consent, I have made you part of me.

VIII

It is night, the long rain slants silently
Down through a hollow sphere of murky space—
An empty world of silence crowds about me,
Nascent with shadows of a form and face
Behold, you have become a memory,
An airy vision from a far gone time,
A dear dim chord of a song that used to be,
The last vibration of some once clear chime,

The moist, obscuring wall of darkness breaks,
And the misty herald of the dawn steals through
The rift, and from its dream the world awakes.
It is morn, and I must cease my song of you.
I have loved, and the love that I have known
Has been a cry; now all is said and done.

Credo

Besides Economics a Senior learns several things in his eighth term. We have here compiled a partial list of these bits of information. Most Seniors believe,

That Senior Editors have a racket.

That one rises to heights on the publication staffs through earnest endeavor.

That the Cavanaughs will not take it kindly if one calls them janitors.

That Doctor Potter is French.

That Doctor Potter is German.

That Doctor Potter is English.

That Doctor Potter is a New Englander.

That Doctor Leuchs gets a kick out of handing out pink cards.

That Arista members never get pink cards.

That at graduation every senior feels a secret pang at parting from the dear old school and has to fight hard to keep back the tears.

That our teachers are sorry to see us go.

That the librarians have read every book in the library.

That those who weren't in the "Applejack" cast were lucky because they missed a lot of hard work which was unappreciated anyway.

That Mr. Serwer did great things at college, scholastically, socially and athletically and that at present he is a champion amateur prizefighter but that we don't know about it because he fights under an assumed name.

That the Esprit de Corps existing between the Comet Staff members is greater than that between the members of the Royal Scots Guards or the "Blue Devils."

That Poppy Peshkin, Alyce Karlin and Ruth Swerdlick are slated for glorification by Mr. Zigfield at some very early future date.

That Mr. Rosenzweig should be directing plays for David Belasco instead of wasting his time teaching.

That "school spirit" is a dead number in New Utrecht.

That the senior class next term is goiny to have a headache picking the most beautiful what with Ruth Goldberg, Sylvia Block, "Angel" Peshlin and "But" Tanenhaus, not to mention a dozen others to pick from.

That the author of this is sorry that he ever saw a test tube.

That the motto of this Senior Class is going to be this term as in all past and future terms, "Whadja get in Eco."

That Jennings Lang whose middle name is Bentley and, who is known by his intimates as "Limpid" is, in the jargon of the day, "a darn good racketeer."

That by the law of averages we're going to have a good football team next term.

JOSEPH BELVEDERE

I TOO, have tried to write a farewell poem; it was going to be a sonnet. At every attempt I would first work myself into a grand and noble mood (by refusing to eat sphaghetti, my favorite dish) and then sitting down to produce, but I could not get beyond the first three lines. It took me one long month to discover that I really was not going to feel grand and noble about graduation. After all, seven hundred boys and girls are graduating with me, and the majority are glad to go. So am I, I suppose.

I do not subscribe to the popular belief that it is of no use to acquire friends at school, since they are going to be lost on graduation day. It is enough, I think, to expect to gain one or two real friends, and whether we are satisfied or not, that is usually the case. The rest of the students are bubbles, figuratively, that come to life and begin to expand on the first day of school and die with a loud pop on commencement day. They are of all colors and sizes, they furnish the color and excitement of the classroom hours, they make school what it is, and in the end they pass away, lost, but not forgotten.

Morris Zolotow, whom you have heard (Editor's note: sarcasm), angular, word-pouring, head-flooding Morris is quite a prominent blurb. I don't expect to see him again after this month, yet I shall remember one incident that happened in the early part of this term. I showed Morris a short poem, a fragile thing called "A Little While". He liked it immensely. "Who wrote it?", he asked, highly elated. "Sara Teasdale", I answered, and turned away, but to my horror he queried, "Gee! how nice! What prefect is she in?" Brenner, who was present, and I did the rest, though either of us could have done it alone, since Morris is but sixteen and his skeleton does a lot of stretching to fill up his ample interior.

Brenner, Sidney Brenner, glass-wearing, neck-stretching, gol-derned walking dictionary in a white chemistry smock, confounding teachers and students alike with his unbounded store of words and his embarassing horn-of-plenty ideas. He's a deceiving scamp, this man of a thousand poses, for inside his atmosphere of superior stuffs that causes one to run away from him, he's quite human. Well, Sid is the only boy in school to whom I concede a perfect right to his conclusions.

Krantz, the big boss, the flywheel in that machine that runs the business down in that Comet office on the first floor. This strapping son of the North is the only fellow I've liked since I knew him; he always knew his onions. And Gene Loveman, machine-gun man from not so way out west, called a "good fellow" by everybody, and especially by me. Still, he is composing my knock, and woe to him if it be an unfortunate one. (Editor's Note: Don't you fret, Joe, it's O. K.)

Sam Levine, the man who worked his way through school without working . . . . and succeeded, by golly. Lester Rosenblum, the bravest soul east of 320 and all points north and south. Irving Rothschild, with the heartiest laugh I have ever heard anywhere. Joseph D'Addario, whose name I have never spelled correctly. Jack Ohlandt, whose key I will keep as evidence that he was my locker-mate. Vinnie Romano, a Utrecht rarity, the only fellow to order the Comet in advance! McGuire, Grace and De Meo, Unltd., the Three Musketeers, blond-topped, strong-armed, gentle-hearted trio of the Jim Bludsoe type. Dan Wolfert, who was a president, but changed his mind and went to work. And Sidney Rabinowitz, most intimate of mates . . . . seat-mate in Miss Herschkowitz's Eco class with the automatc Eco talking machine in the rear and the reddening-while-rising thermometer in the front. Indispensible member of the Miss Taylor-Latin 6 and 6 Era, along with Berkowitz and Berg. Sidney is the one I want next to me, out of the whole beloved bunch, when we sing the final strains of our school songs with a truly heart-felt spirit down at the Academy in that last hour.

Oh yes! the faculty! Mr. Rosenzweig whom I have admired. Mr. Serwer, to whom I never spoke because he wanted to see me about changing lines in my poems, and whom, since I wanted no change, I always avoided. Miss Mullins, worth her weight (and a few extra pounds to boot) in common sense; it is good to know that people like her inhabit this funny old world. Mr. Fanning, eminently popular teacher of Spanish, whose unforgivable hoax about the farmer's daughter no one who was in Spanish 38 of Fall, 1929 will ever forget. (In the middle of the night she crept to his, Mr. Fanning's room, took his hand and . . . . here the bell rang, but the class posted two Herculean guardsmen at the doors in order that he might finish the story . . . . led him to the kitchen, where she gave him a piece of cheese he had desired earlier in the evening!) And Mr. Sternberg, the only teacher who has made me know what I shall want of life. And to Mrs. Friedman, earnest worker, I am truly grateful.

I remember those who have left before, also. Selma Blazer whose poem, "Summer Storm" is, in my estimation, the loveliest poem ever to shine from these pages. Shulman, diminutive Mattie, sweetheart of the regiment, impetuous liver of life, whose target practice on the robust anatomy of the pseudo-stern Shapiro and the equally serious red-haired Hyden's rounded front will live, according to Brenner, even after his inspirational poems have died. And Bernard Saperstein, he of the Chestertonian frame (according to O.C.) and wit (according to Bernie himself) who was always writing terribly liquish love poems to every girl he talked with for more than three minutes.

This may be the last chance we will have (we may be graduated who knows) to knock those former Utrecht "big shots" who are so kindly condescended to "razz" us when we were mere freshmen and they were the almighty seniors. Therefore with untold leisure and boundless glee we take this golden opportunity to inform our fellow students, in our own way, of the revered existence of the alumni of the best school in the world (patriotism we calls it).

Lawrence Mezz, '24: (who is now a practising lawyer) "Well-er-if you want my honest opinion . . . . "

Murry Katin: (merchandising man for the Dupont company) "No, no—I sent your professional advice!"

This is a conversation between two of Hunters most brilliant bright lights:—

Helen Davidson, '28—"What did Juliet say to Romeo when she met him in the balcony?"

Harriet S. Greenstein, '28 (leader of the Fenmore Club Orchestra)—"What'll we play for an encore?"

Ethel Leiberman, 29—recipitant of the Bossom award is now a teacher clerk in Utrecht. Cornering her one day in the office, we asked,

"Whaddya do Eth.?"

"I push!"

"Pusha da what?"

"I pusha da plug."

In other words she is the vicious character who reclines at the switchboard and so ruthlessly and unsympathetically connects Mrs. Averitt and Dr. Leuchs with our parents, when we're in trouble and wanted for cutting or otherwise.

We hate to mention—the names of the "aluminum" (We calls it) connected with the following incident, but all we can say (shamefully) is that they were two real, marvelous, and intellectual beings before that rascal Dan Cupid pierced their hearts and brains:—He was in a poetic frenzy as he strolled along the seashore.

Paul Stein, '26—Roll on, thou dark, deep, blue ocean, roll!"

Ruth Weinstein, '30—Oh, . . . , how wonderful you are! It's really doing it."

Lew Taub, 26—"So your brother finally got his B.A. and M.A.?"

Paula Zohlman, '27—"Yes, indeed, but Pa still supports him."

If Milton Lipson, '30, doesn't stop opening his mouth and talking through his nose, he'll be wanted at the next conference for Nasal Disarmament."

Sydell Netishe '27—"Oh, why was I born a great musician?"

Hound Newman '28—"You weren't, dearie!"

Freddie Schwartz '28—"Ah! You have finally given me the money you owe me. But say this ten-cent piece doesn't sound very good."

Math. Hess Schulman '30—"What do you want for a dime, a set of chimes?"

The three 'Skeeters, "Sammeth", "Schlansky", and "Shapiro", are now having the times of their lives at N. Y. U. (Heights) N. Y. U. (night) and B. C. C. N. Y. (daylight) respectively.

IMAGINATION

ERIE shadows on the walls,
Strangely prancing!
Before my sight, in the candle light,
Long forgotten, long dead Souls,
Queerly dancing!

Chilly sighs of winds around,
Fear is bored!
And from the light, the Shapes take flight,
As through the silence comes a sound,——
And I am scared!

MARKS IN THE SAND

I WALK along life's ocean strand,
And leave my footprints on the sand,
As farther down the shore I pass,
I backward cast a glance, alas!
Before I've walked the lengthy shore
I find my path is there no more.

For from dark oblivion's sea
An icy wave came close to me;
Swept every trace from off the earth,
Left not one imprint of my worth
Upon the world which sheltered me,
Save those which He alone may see.

I care not that my foot no more
Will tread upon that sandy shore,
As long as He who weighs the sands,
Will with glory and not with shame,
Into His Book inscribe my name.

JOFFRE: A TRIBUTE

NOW hide your fades, stars;
Your night be dimmed, O sun.
The warrior's sword is sheathed;
The builder's work is done.

Ah France! from thee is torn
A true son of they heart,
Earth's staunchest spirit slain
By death's destroying dart.

Yet thou shalt never bow
Before the Vandal horde;
His soul shall be they shield,
His memory thy sword.

HATRED

KINDLED by the paths of desire,
Aroused by ruthless passions,
Flamed by the deeds of mankind,
Fanned by unknown forces
Hatred burns a path thru life.

COLD NIGHTS

THE year turns, and in these nights
The wind will be hard to fight and the air will be chill;
But this time I shall not go out,
I shall not let them drag me out against my will.

The year turns, and in these nights
The Street will be dark and your ghost will be haunting the Place;
But this time I shall not go near,
I cannot bear to remember even your face.

The year turns, and in these nights
The stars will be bringing friends and the trees will bear frost;
But this time I shall not be watching,
I will not be made to think of what I lost.

CAPTAIN APPLEJACK

Drawings by Florence Sachnoff

Applejacktics

"Captain Applejack" was perhaps the most successful play ever presented by the New Utrecht Dramatic Society. Credit is due to Mr. Rosenzweig who spent tiresome hours not only in directing the play, but also in planning and constructing the scenery. The value of Mr. Serwer's work need not even be spoken of since it was self-evident that the entire production rested on his shoulders.

Since this is the senior issue we are going to introduce the seniors, who made the Varsity Show a success. Please step a little closer this way and you will be able to see the terrible Borolsky. Borolsky, Ladees and Gents, is really Herbie Poresky. Poresky plies his pirate trade as Business Manager of the Comet. Milton Traeger, or "Johnny on the spot" Jason, will be among those missing when school starts again. Henry E. Krantz was back at his old post as Business Manager. With luck, we may not have the pleasure of his company next term. Ezra Kohan who came back as an alumnus to help put the show over—andHow! Lush, known to the admiring public as Eugene J. Loveman is also a member of the deah old Comet Staff. Norman Rothschild Artist for the Nuntius was the man who painted the pirate who terrified the girls in the study hall. And Jeanne Lustgarten, the secretary of the Dramatic Society should not be forgotten. Sidney Brenner it was that created suspense and spread the tale through the medium of the Nuhs. There, my children, are seniors who made your school play a success.

At about the time this will go to press, the "Applejack" cast will be presenting their play again for the benefit of the unemployed. Lot's of luck and congratulations.

In the bookshelves for "Captain Applejack" along with "Les Miserables", "Essays of Schopenhauer" and "The Work of Oscar Wilde", we found "The Motor Boys Over the Rockies" and a complete set of "Rover Boys".

As a senior and one in hot water we'd like to advise you undergraduates to decide on the college you want to go to and to pick and pass your courses accordingly. Miss Simpson, the angel of the General Office and Mr. Leonard, College Advisor and friend to the school in general, are always willing and happy to help you in your choice of courses and college.

* * * *

To those of you who would like to know whether or not teachers are human we tell this story. Not so long ago we met Miss Goldblatt on the train and in the course of the ride from 34th St. to De Kalb Ave., during which we discussed cabbages and kings, we came to the conclusion that teachers are human and very nice.

* * * *

In response to a request for the information, we have the entire staff working on a tabulation of the number of pink cards extant. We promise a statement by the first issue of next term. A count of the number of big shots which has also been requested is quite out of the question since you'd all be dead and forgotten before we could finish.

* * * *

In spite of everything that has been said and done by the students of this school especially, the seniors—the service squad will not let people out of the building without a pass.

* * * *

What we never expect to see—

"Mutt" Gewant carrying books
Anita B. Kurtin without Gilbert Nelson
A Black List without our names
A short line in front of Mrs. Aiveretts' office
Bess Dworkin when she's not talkin'
Harry D. Pruzick wearing knickers

Mr. Leonard took up miniature golf and really plays a fair game . . . if you watch him.

* * * *

And this actually happened in a History Class

Mr. Bernstein: "And when Lord Chesterfeld saw that the end was near he called his friend to his bedside and uttered these immortal words. Who can tell me what they were?"

Voice from Rear: "They satisfy."

* * * *

In a Spanish Class

The teacher: "And why should this verb be conjugated differently from the rest?"

Star Pupil: "Oh! it's an old Spanish cusom."

* * * *

Poor bug,
You've never gone to school
And you've never even learned the golden rule,
I don't think you know the Latin word for "fool."
Poor bug!

Poor bug,
I think it's quite unfair,
That you've never factored a perfect square
And you don't know the outcome of the Dreyfus affair
Poor bug!

* * * *

From the Math office—A circle is a round straight line with a hole in the middle.

A history teacher contributed this: American are allowed only one wife. This is called monotony.

* * * *

Constitutional rights—No man may take another's wife without his consent.

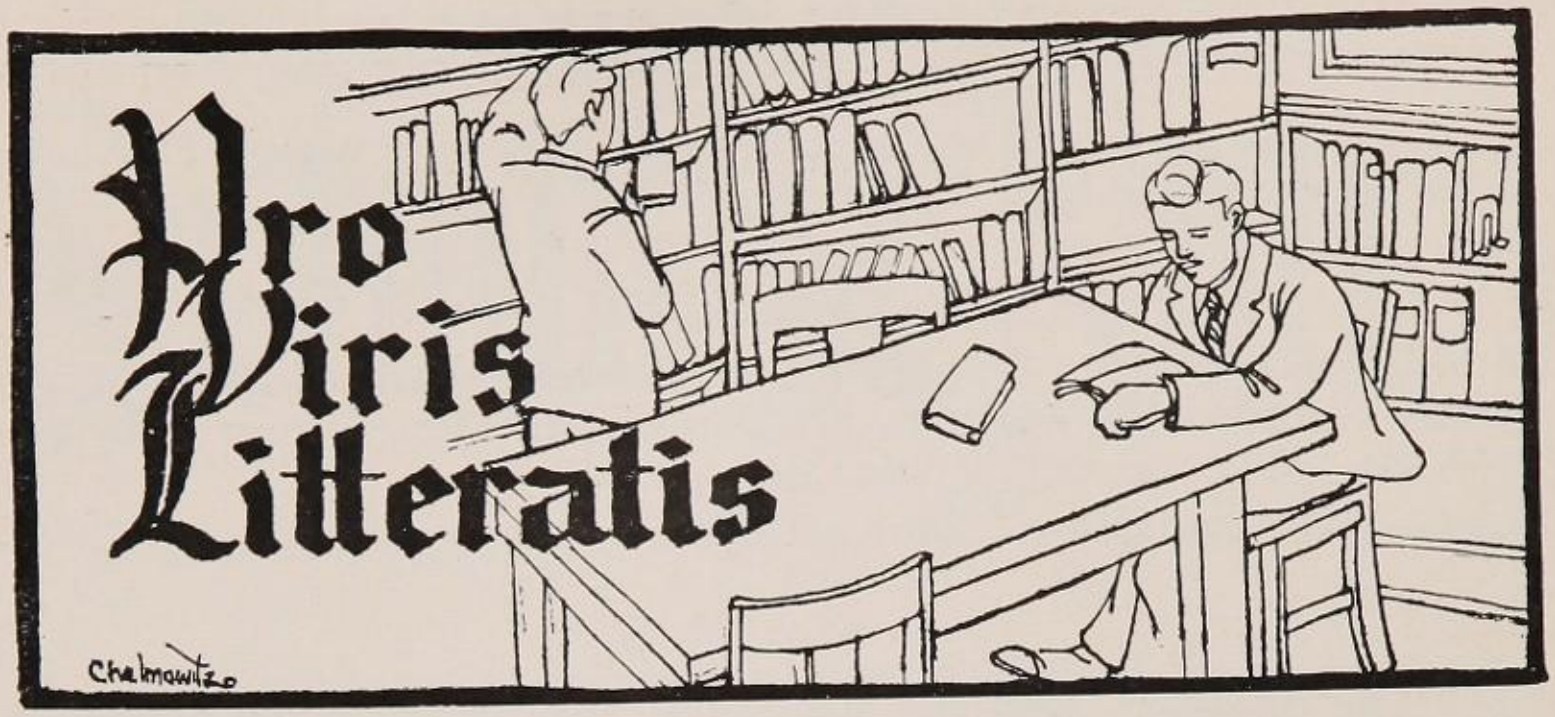
* * * *

The Senior Prom was a success socially and financially as usual.

* * * *

We're going to sue the managers of that outstanding hit "Girl Crazy" for plagirism. Where do they get that stuff, being "Girl Crazy", originated from Mr. Leonard's Squad.

Under that most able and expert guardianship of Mr. Leonard and Mr. Schiffer the squad has progressed to just that point where they are perfect gentleman? But nevertheless, still "Girl Crazy" we almost forgot "limpid" Lang.



SIEGFRIED: a drama by Jean Giradoux presented by Eva Le Gallienne at The Civic Repertory Theatre.

The theme of Siegfried, another of the plays in the repertoire of The Civic Repertory Theatre, is one which cannot but catch and hold the attention of the audience. It is seldom that a play has for its central idea the predicament of a man who has has his soul torn over a worthwhile motive between two desires. Siegfried is such a play.

Siegfried is a man suffering from amnesia who becomes chancellor of Germany before he discovers that he is Frenchman. He must choose between governing the further destinies of Germany's teeming millions and returning to France to an existence barren except for his old faithful dog, and his former fiancee.

That a spiritual change must have taken place in Siegfried's soul, we know. That this is really the case Jacob Ben-Ami determines for us by his rendition of the role of Siegfried. Margaret Mower played the part of the German girl who makes an appeal to Siegfried's intellect and lust for power to keep him in Germany.

Opposing her, representing France, was Eva Le Gallienne as the fiancee of the French Siegfried. I rather think that Miss Le Gallienne's private individuality coincides with the half serious, half facetious but wholly earnest character of Genevieve, the French girl. If this is not the case, Miss Le Gallienne is a consummate actress.

At any rate Siegfried chooses obscurity in France. Though the play was replete with sparkling passages, I especially enjoyed the scene at the border between France and Germany. The boundary ran through the center of the Customs Duty House. On one side of the stage, we have France, on the other Germany. The French Customs Duty Officer seriously advises the German officer to dust his benches away from the imaginery boundary line so as not to send any German dust into France. This Frenchman will not allow Siegfried to pass the border until the train is due; but he does allow the former chancellor to lean over the border to warm his hands. When Genevieve pushes open the gate which is nothing more than a stick of wood on a hinge, the officer growls that some people do not realize what a draft there is from Germany. Howard da Silva played the part of this genial autocrat of the border.

MRS. MOONLIGHT: a fantasy written by Benn W. Levy, directed and produced by Charles Hopkins at the Charles Hopkins Theatre. Review by Fred Berkowitz.

Mrs. Moonlight is a delightfully light-footed fantasy through and through. Its plot and theme have exactly the right proportions of vagary and whimsy to produce in the audience the same strange sense of unreality and eerieness that a silver flood of moonlight produces in the awakened dreamer at four in the morning.

Sara Moonlight, in love with her husband Tom, intensely desires to retain his love. And so, she makes the wish that her beauty may not be ravished by age. Her wish is granted and she is fated to watch her beloved husband grow older while she maintains her youthful appearance.

Since I have disclosed enough of the plot to indicate the theme of Mrs. Moonlight, I find it advisable to stop my description at this point. In the subsequent acts, Mrs. Moonlight trips along as light-footedly as in the first, stumbling slightly once or twice, but not heavily enough to destroy the illusion of unreality constantly impressed upon the audience.

Edith Barrett played the part of Sarah Moonlight. Despite the fact that she overacted at times, her performance was up to the requirements of so fanciful a play. Her characterization lent to the play such an air of wistfulness that the audience could not help but be drawn more fully into the elusive magic of the play. Opposite her, Sir Guy Standing, performed as Tom Moonlight. I admired Sir Standing's impersonation very much. But I fear to go into particulars about him for then I could not rest until I had eulogized the rest of the small cast. I was attracted by the work of Haidee Wright as Minnie, Sarah's nurse; of Leo Carroll as Percy, the apathetic suitor of Sarah's daughter, Jane; of Vernon Kelso, the magnetic Willie, Percy's rival; of Katherine Standing as Sarah's daughter.

Another factor contributing toward an illusion of unreality was the tininess of the Charles Hopkins Theatre. This theatre seats an audience of less than two hundred.

The spell which Mrs. Moonlight cast over me was not broken until I had wandered far enough down Broadway in the snow to catch cold. And therefore, my recommendation to see this play is wholehearted.

ROADS TO GLORY

By Richard Aldington—Doubleday Doran & Co.

Here are war sketches that bring to us a clear picture of a living inferno, a series of reactions, poignant, sardonic, pathetic. Drama, irony, sorrow, madness, all in a dozen short selections by a poet who had managed somehiw to survive as an individual in that chaos. Such episodes as "Killed in Action," "Sacrifice Post" and "Farewell to Memories" are, in particular, pictorial of the dullness, the weariness, the disillusion, the isolated frenzy of war. In the "Farewell to Memories," the soldier, Brandon, is a true portrayal of the mechanical image of a man, who in that bedlam of agony and filth with death all about, felt that to die would be a reopening of peace, that is. life.

Aldington with a poet's heart has written purely upon reactions, sheer horror, a confusion of sudden changes from life to death. There is about it all, throughout, a sense of sorrow and then above all a sardonic coldness. Just as in every story of the war reaction Aldington shows his utter disparagement of the glorified illusion of Mars; by his choice of symbols of war, the gallant illusion, the dull reality and the power of war. This is hardly a book to describe. It creates for the reader an atmosphere into which he enters and emerges, to see and to hear and to feel. A book that is bound to remain in memory, never to be forgotten.

Censored, the Private Life of the Movies—by Morris L. Ernst and Pare Lorentz. Cape and Smith—$2.50.

Even in the U.S. a man is comparatively free to write what he likes. Our newspapers have almost complete freedom of press. Our magazines go untrammeled in the mails. Our novels are freely sold—no matter how frankly they go into "life".

And yet our most potent expression—the movies—are censored, cut, and hacked to pieces to fit the ideologies of morons and ten year olds. When I consider the universal appeal of the movies and how it can be a factor for good or bad in the lives of Americans, the question becomes a serious problem.

Morris L. Ernst, staunch fighter for civil liberties, and Pare Lorentz, movie critic of "Judge" write about this question, intelligently, evidently with a knowledge of all the facts involved, and with no lack of humor.

Did you know, for instance, that the thumb against the nose (in the movies, of course) is a felony in Kansas, that a kiss on the neck is illegal in Maryland, that "prolonged success of criminals" is also taboo in Maryland, that in our own New York you can get arrested for a scene showing a boy putting a brick in a prizefighter's glove.

This is censorship in it's humorous aspects, but it is no laughing matter when men who have not even graduated from High School begin censoring classics like "The Scarlet Letter," "Sadie Thompson," "Anna Karenina" or "Tess of the D'Ubervilles." According to the standards of these censors we would have to bar Shaw, Ibsen, O'Neill, and Shakespeare from the school library.

Of course, no one would deny that censorship is necessary to a certain extent as far as a commercial think like movies are concerned. But if we are to have censorship let us get it at least from educators, college professors, writers and psychologists. At present as Ernst and Lorentz take pains to point out, the censors are all a bunch of ninnies.

The book is full of interesting pictures of scenes that have been cut from various films by censors, and also some photos of the guardians of the public morals, themselves. And when you see their pictures you'll make the gesture that's illegal in Maryland and sigh, "So this is what tells me what I can or can not see at the — Theatre."

But you'd better not curse. It's against the law in Pennsylvania in the cinema.

MAD MAN'S DRUM

By Lynd Ward, Jonathan Cape and Harrison Smith

Explorers of ancient Egyptian tombs have come upon stories without words, written by ancient Egyptian historians, which tell figure tales of conquest and achievement. In this day and age there is an attempt to revert to that form of writing.

Lynd Ward as a maker of word cuts has a remarkable sense of accuracy but in attempting to combine these cuts into an obvious and worthwhile story, he has produced a tale whose point is hidden in the depths of obscurity, and whose plot is vague and confusing.

The cuts depict, at first, an African slaver who seems to have made a tidy sum in return for his load of blacks. Then there is a contrast between his home life as a gentleman, and his grim life as a seagoing villian. There is a son, an intellectual genius, an astronomer. In the midst of the son's intellectual ascension, the father is lost at sea. The opening half of the book is obscure enough, but from thence onward all attempt at clarity is lost. The son's life is evidently filled with sorrow and disappointment, but the exact meaning of it all I could not divine. It all ends with the African drum, a possession of civilization.

Individually the woodcuts are fine and effective, but compiled to form a novel, in the wordless primitive manner, they leave an unfinished story, a set of illustrations without the accompanying explanations.

The son's life is evidently filled with sorrow and disappointment, but the exact meaning of it all I could not divine. It all ends with the African drum, a possession of civilization.

Individually the woodcuts are fine and effective, but compiled to form a novel, in the wordless primitive manner, they leave an unfinished story, a set of illustrations without the accompanying explanations.

Vagabonds: a novel by Knut Hamsun—published by Edward McCann.

FOR his theme material Knut Hamsun has always used the story of men bred in the earth, farmers with their life roots in the ground and their souls wedded to the raising of the crops and to the smelling of clean, frtshly-turned earth.

In the Vagabonds, Knut Hamsun does not deviate from his usual theme. He places his sturdy son of the soil in an impoverished Norwegian village. This Joakim and his brother-in-law Ezra sweat over their farms to improve them: they drain bogs, build barns and stalls, and donate with the callous of their fingers and the weariness of their bones a certain prosperity to their farms that they might the better support their wives.

To make his theme the more penetrating this time, Knut Hamsun has inducted into his book two new characters, vagabonds,Edwardand August both of whom leave their little village early in life and return from time to time during periods of prosperity in order to impress the villagers with their possessions. Finally, however, Edward in his wanderings loses his birthright, an honest soul, capable of hard labor, and August his swaggering bold front. They return to the village to potter about the fields. They are men who have become aware of the better things of life such as cookies and sugar and watches.To return to the cultivation of the soil inspires in them no spark of feeling.

"Try to find out where we really belong . . . . Ay, August tried it! Do we really belong where we get the most food, the finest clothes, the most money? If so, our own father and mother would not have been satisfied and thankful for the roof over their heads all their born days here in Polden; no, then it would not be true that they have lived far more happily than, let's say, that August and—ay, and others who prowl around and belong no place at all."

Knut Hamsun has a preciose style which never becomes involved. With this style, Knut Hamsun nicely separates his ideas before they are able to confuse: a book of this sort written by most authors would leave in the mind of the reader a vague impression of the strength of the stolid farmer and the hopelessness of vagabondage. From Kamsun's, however we receive a definite, sharply lined series of pictures: young Edward, the eager, hard-worker, more than willing to do his share of the work, and shy in his admiration of the great schooner captains who dry their fish on the drying grounds of Polden: then Edward, newly turned wanderer and shy lover: and Edward casual lover, beginning to tire of his ascents and descents along the side of the mountain of fortune; and lastly Edward, worn out at an early age, willing to work, but too lackadaisical to build a foundation upon which to set his labor.

EDUCATION AND LIFE

Plato has it that before a man can take a leading place in a state or community he must complete a period of schooling that will fit him to occupy that place and follow it with another period of education outside of his school's walls, in the world he is to rule.

We are leaving our school's sheltering walls and the teachers who helped us to learn to think and who assigned homework to shape our thoughts to definite ends. Most of us are leaving the world of theory to enter the world of fact. Most of what we learned we will forget, but what we learned in learning will remain with us. Spinoza has expressed the idea better than any of us can in his theory of modes and substances. Facts are transient things, things that pass, modes, styles, while substances are the eternal laws which control these modes. The modes will pass, but the substances which have been pointed out to us the eternal laws, will continue to direct our actions and our lives. We who are passing on into the flame of life are being injected into an education of a difficult and a more important one then the one we have been getting in high school.

Here the success or failure of our schooling will be conclusively demonstrated. Will we be confused by the storm and strife, will we become ofraid or will we apply our knowledge and successfully pick our path? In other words, will we be able to apply our knowledge of fundamental laws, will we be able to separate the transient from the eternal, the dross from the gold.

In the last conclusion, life will be the great teacher. Experience to us will no doubt prove to be sand-paper or a fresh new surface, our epidermis will become raw and red, but if our education has served us in good stead, the wounds will heal and we shall find ourselves keener and finer. Our education at school has been a hand which has grasped ours and led us gently or forcibly to a path and left us. The path is obscure, but always we can look back and see an index finger pointing, pointing out the right direction. The path is a winding one but if we find our way, we have succeeded in our double education and we are on the wider road of a good life.

HIAWATHA TAKES THE TRAIL

For the trail of Mishe Mokku
Long had sought my Hiawatha
Sought him long and sought him vainly.
Sought him here and sought him yonder.

For the stalwart Mishe Kokku
Had destroyed his friend Miyeekis.
With a shot gun Mishe Mokku
Had destroyed the bold Miyeekis
With a knife had deeply stabbed him
In a bath tub he had drowned him
With a rope securely hanged him.

Straightway then my Hiawatha
From a profound sense of duty
Took the trail of Mishe Mokku
Slayer of the bold Miyeekis
Through the poolrooms of the city
Through the slums
And through the night clubs
Had my gallant Hiawatha
Sought the trail of Mishe Mokku.

After many months of searching
Months of toil and months of travail
In the backroom of a speak soft
Hiawatha earthed his quarry
Found the long-sought Mishe Mokku.
And he fell upon him crying
"Long I've sought you Mishe Mokku
With a medal from the neighbors
Of your slaughtered friend Miyeekis.
No more with his braying trombone
Will the dead and gone Miyeekis
Break our slumbers,
Wreck our households.
In the Land of the Hereafter,
From which no single note
Can reach us
As a trial to Angel patience
On his trombone bold Miyeekis
Blats and brays and raises thunder
Leaving us our peaceful households
And our dreamy quiet evenings
Therefore gallant Mishe Mokku
Accept this medal from your neighbor.

CLASS WILL

The Senior Class of January, 1931, having been duly examined and declared by medical authority to be sound of mind and feeble of body, do donate, bequeath, and bestow upon our beneficiaries all worldly goods that we possessed, as follows:

To the Cavanaughs, the Senior and Junior partners we leave the wads of chewing gum which adorn the underside of seats and desks of those portions of the room which our fair ones do inhabit.

To Dr. Leuchs we leave words of sincere thanks for his steadfast patience in listening to and accepting our oft-repeated tales of woe.

To the Senior Class of June, we leave those of our incumbents who have decided, for one reason or another, to stay another term, and to our revered faculty we leave a hope for rejuvenation.

To Miss Simpson we leave eight or nine thousand undergraduates with the hope that that their records and their chances of graduation will look better than ours.

To Mr. Rosenzweig we leave Morris E. Zolotow, the COMET office Blanche Ursula Tanenhaus and Poppy "Angel" Peshkin (May God have mercy on his soul).

To Mr. Applebaum, Senior Class advisor for next term we leave our commiserations and Jennings "Limpid" Lang.

To the Latin Department we leave a complete stable of useful little "ponies" variously called Caesar, Cicero, and Virgil.

Class Prophecy

After having completed the nine year correspondence course prescribed for us in the Year Book of the Class of June, 1930, we obtained the final word—and so we beget ourselves to work.

Wahoo! Henry E. Krantz— He certainly has gone high in life, occupying the roof garden pent house of the Empire State Building, he sits submerged in a stack of papers assigning destinies to us helpless mortals. All notes being taken by his secretary who is still arguing with him. "But" . . . she is saying.

Wahoo! A slow, languorous trip across the ocean in twelve seconds, we find ourselves in the most fashionable tea room in the West End of London where we find "Hemmer" Mackler presiding over a tea given by her friends. She had just completed her stirring speech in Hyde Park on "The Value of Athletics in a Woman's Life", and was accepted as a member of Parliament.

Wahoo! Rushing back to the deah ole states in 8 seconds we stumble upon Bernard D. Daitz, M.D., administering first aid to the great masses who are suffering with eye trouble because Martin D. (cinder in the eye) Cohen had just passed. It got us too! Wahoo! Now it's out.

Wahoo! The Metropolitan Opera House! It has been rented for a special presentation of Eugene J. Loveman's play starring Herbert W. Poresky as Dirty Dalton, Helen G. Schwartz as Mademoiselle De Maintenon and press agented by Leo Rosenblum.

Wahoo! We spot Moe Dworkin hobbling along the streets. He tries to tell us that those hickies are from the football field but we know better. We've seen a dozen future football players and cow girls "dworkin" around him.

Wahoo! We return to a familiar scene. It used to be Mrs. Aiverett's office. Miss Evy Bleiden occupies it now, and very hard-heartedly she turns down requests for sick passes, and punishes offenders. What a pass for the typical seniorette to come to.

Wahoo! The subway pillars on 86th St. shake and tremble, there is a crash of breaking windows—Mutt Gewant and Norman Jeffer are having an argument.

Wahoo! Alyce Karlin slinking furtively up Bay Parkway—she stops in front of a shop and making sure nobody is around she goes in. Wahoo! We go and look into the place. It is Yudy Finkelstein's Beauty Shoppe specializing in "the recall of departed beauty."

Wahoo! We're on the lower East Side. A familiar figure—we see Leonard Ginsburg arguing with Abie Cohen about the exhorbinate prices this "honest, one-price" clothier is telling him—

"I should liff so, it custs me more, but I'll gon lose a few cents so I shouldn't lose my customer. It custs me $60 and 23 cents but I'll let you heff it for $6.75. Tenk you—Goot-bye."

Barely shaking off this spendthrift we find ourselves in front of the store that's always on the square. Belle Finkel is seen purchasing the latest styles from Paris, f.o.b., 39th St., N. Y. C.

Wahoo! Morton A. Schiffer, Don Juan of the Class of 1931, is now Omar Aubaish, the world's greatest lover. The man whose asthma is often mistaken for his passion. The man who can at one glance make a woman fall for him. Instead of looking at them with daggers, he does it with banana peels. How can they resist falling!

Wahoo! Wahoo! A lean, old, weatherbeaten man with crutches is seen swaggering up the street. It is none other than Mr. Zachary A. Serwer, once faculty adviser of the Senior Class but long since deposed and glad of it. He is now the world's greatest lawyer, specializing in marital triangles and love-lorn suicides. He is still a poor man because he can't keep up the supply of carpets that Teddy chews up.

Wahoo! Sidney Brenner, too busy to pay any attention to us. Engrossed in scores of books, De Maupassant, Bocaccio, etc., trying to find a way to make love but Bop! He is Thrown down! Jilted, Rejected, Heartbroken. He returns to his attic studio and writes sonnets.

Wahoo! The scene is a garret in Greenwich village. Lou Goland and Norman Rothschild are sitting side by side with brushes in their hands. Goland strokes his brush once, Rothschild goes over it with another color. Let's look a little closer—they are painting the Wall—

We'll have to stop now! Unless we forget about Ole Man Regents.

HENRY E. KRANTZ
Chief Wahoo

The score is now .1 up!

BASKETBALL

The New Utrecht basketball team opened its season auspiciously by defeating the strong Stuyvesant contingent 24-23. In the following practice games against Textile and Newton, the Green and White quintet bowed down in defeat after a hard battle. In the latter game, the score stood at 20-20. An extra period was necessary and Newton eked out the victory, 27-24.

Coach Ross, however, is in high spirits and he says rather optimistically "We have a very good chance to finish on or near the top and I won't be surprised if we take the City Championship. The boy's passing and all-around team work is improving with every practice game."

The reason for this happy state of mind is very evident when one goes to the gym to see the squad practice under the able tutelage of Coach Ross and assistant-coach Berkowitz.

At one basket one finds Emil Bonavita and Ben Roskin practising shots at all angles. Emil is known to all for his stellar performances on the track and football squads while Ben acquired his fame with New Utrecht baseball and football teams. Not far from them practiced Lautman and Mack Savodnick who, with Bonavita and Roskin round out as formidable a quartet of guards as could be found in the city.

Mike Ratzon, the star goalie of the soccer team, will share the center position with Harry Pruzick. Both are tall lads who are not only fleet of foot but can shoot quickly and accurately from all angles of the court.

The loss, through graduation, of "Midge" Jackowitz and Mike Berlin has left both forward positions vacant but Coach Ross does not seem to be troubled by this fact, having very promising material to fill their vacancies. Sauntering over to the other side of the court to view het several forwards practicing there. Suddenly a ball came sailing from mid-court and with a gentle swish sank into the basket, evidently one of the famous "Whitey" Rosenthal shots. "Whitey" is the far-shot marvel of the team. He saw quite a bit of action last season together with Babe Adler another forward and because of their experience great things are expected of them this coming season. Others of great promise are Esposito and Larry Hoffman. Handweiler must be praised for his fine performance in the Stuyvesant game. "Lulu", one of the smallest players to ever grace a Green and White uniform, was sent in as a substitute and though greatly handicapped by his opponents great height, gave such a fine exhibition of playing that Coach Ross allowed him to continue until the termination of the contest.

From this talented group of basketeers, Coach Ross has developed a very versatile team. The pre-season games, arranged by manager Reisner, will put them into top-notch form for the coming P. S. A. L. season.

SWIMMING

The P. S. A. L. swimming season is over and though the team did not win the championship, New Utrecht gave a splendid account of itself. Erasmus Hall once more has come out supreme but the Green and White banner of New Utrecht waves only a notch below in third standing.

Graduation is going to deal a heavy blow to the swimming hopes of New Utrecht. Captain "Sandy" Levine will not be with us next season. He has closed his career in New Utrecht in a blaze of glory and he will be sorely missed in the 50 yard free-style event. Pete Formosa, Captain Levine's mate, who has been used on the relay several times this season, will still be with us when next season rolls around. Kane will probably be the other 50 yard entrant as he has been used in the short dash this season with great success. The first places garnered by "Harry" Schneiderman after being shifted to the century dash proved to be important factors in all victories. Jack Kolinsky has placed behind "Hank" several times and has shown marked improvement in his work. Oscar Harney, too, will be lost to us through the demon—graduation. The many points for which he was responsible will be sorely missed next season. "Bud" Friedman, the other long distance man has done fine and dependable work all season.

Graduation does not seem to have the least consideration for the future of our team. It will also take away Sol Selevan, the star backstroke and high scoring ace of the team. Eli Kristal, the promising newcomer who has done so well behind Selevan, will remain and we are assured of several firsts from him. Neil Sacco has not been doing much diving this season because he was used in the sprints and on the relay, but he is undoubtedly one of the finest divers in the city. In the Manual and Erasmus meets he was the only Utrechtite to take a first place. A wide gap will be left through the graduation of "Sparky" Cooperstein which Landwehr, a newcomer, will do his best to fill.

In the breast-stroke we are fortunate enough not to lose any one. Coach McDavitt will still have Klugherz and Mike Frank. Both are newcomers who have performed capably all season. The relay composed of Greenberg, Forman, Finfer and Hopfan is to be commended for the fine work they have done this season. The points this quartet scored pulled several meets out of the fire and enabled New Utrecht to finish the season with its fine record.

It is too early for prediction but despite the loss of so many star performers, we may be sure that Coach McDavitt will turn out a team next year that will uphold the standards set by the teams of the past-term, that New Utrecht may well be proud of.

HOCKEY

Following the precedent set by New Utrecht hockey sextets of past years, one of the strongest aggregations ever to wear the Utrecht Green, seems to have nosed itself gently out of the championship race this season, simply because it couldn't break an ancient Indian held for so long by the skaters from Jamaica. A substantial favorite to make off with this year's titular flag, the local team swept through its schedule with flying colors until it came up against the Red and Blue of Jamaica, and then, in a heart-breaking contest, lost 1-0, on a last minute goal. That victory put the Long Islanders at the top of the league and at present, although neither of the teams has completed its schedule there is no indication that Jamaica will drop any games and that school seems certain to retain its berth at the head of the league. There is only one chance for the Green. There may be a post season play-off as in past terms, but up to this point the P. S. A. L. officials have been inclined to the negative.

Starting with a nucleus of Captain Carl Kuntze, volcanic veteran of three seasons, Jerry Goldberg, last year's spare wing, and Romeo "Red" Genchi, another veteran, the pucksters found themselves with an all-star forward line at the beginning of the season but faced the problem of uncovering a suitable defense. However, two famous huskies, Richard "Red" Moore,and George Forman, another six footer, were found to bolster the "hoisting" line, with Junior "Kid" Costello as first spare. Murray Jungman, a member of the squad last season, has taken over the position of goalie and has committed himself in that capacity with rare success.

With the defense problem solved, Coach Fitzpatrick's charges started out on their schedule. Jeffer son was the first victim, falling before the Green onslaught by a 6-0 avalanche. Jerry "Dent-mesh" Goldberg and Toby Silowitz, spare winger scored two apiece in this contest with "Rabbit" Kuntze and "Red" Genchi coming in for one tally apiece. The skaters followed this win with an overwhelming shut-out over Franklin K. Lane, piling up a total of nine goals. Genchi captured scoring honors with four tallies, Kuntze adding two and Jerry Goldberg one. The defense men, Forman and Moore, also entered the scoring column with a marker each.

Coming up against a hard fighting Brooklyn Tech six that has since beaten both Manual and Erasmus, the Green lads found the going a little harder but managed to push a brace of goals into the net by virtue of a concentrated forward attack. At the same time the Fitzpatrickmen remained unscored upon, thanks greatly to the work of Murray Jungman.

A record crowd turned out for the Jamaica-Utrecht classic, and the Ice Palace shook with cheers as the two teams faced off. From the opening whistle, the two teams went at it hammer and tongs, in what many claimed was the best-played and hardest fought contest ever seen in scholastic hockey. For the first half the Utrecht Green seemed to have the edge but the superior work of Eddie Anderson, rival goalie, kept the score at 0-0 for the first period. At the same time Jungman came in for the highest laurels for his performance in the net.

Though New Utrecht seemed to be outskating, outfighting Jamaica, the winners came back in the second half with a little more fight than in the first period. Nevertheless they were kept out of Green territory and Utrecht remained the aggressor until, in a fatal moment, Kuntze and Goldberg were banished on penalties and seizing this opportunity Jamaica rushed in and pushed one through their short-handed rivals. There were but two minutes to play at the time and before New Utrecht could retaliate, the game was over and one goal was enough to keep the team from a championship.

In that Jamaica game one player stood head and shoulders above the rest and that was the Utrecht pilot, Carl Kuntze. The flying Dutchman, in his last year on the hockey team, outskated and fought harder than any of his opponents. Time and again Carl streaked down the ice and hammered the Red and Blue cage only to see his shot turned away by alert Anderson. No one felt the defeat more than the likeable star, who according to his own efforts, should have seen a victory.

In a game coming as an anti-climax after the Jamaica fray, the Utrecht pucksters turned back Stuyvesant, a hard fighting sextet, by the close score of 2-1. The last game played saw the Green team back in form, shutting out Boys High by a 3—0 count. Kuntze, Goldberg, and Moore found the enemy cage.

At present Coach Fitzpatrick's players have two more P. S. A. L. games to play and then will face off against the West Point plebes at the cadets' rink and will follow this with another post season game at PeekskillMilitary Academy. These games have been arranged by the very efficient manager, Edward Vinje, who has been one of the best and most conscientous managers the six has had.

To Mr. Serwer we leave advice and warning to be very careful about the pirate blood which runs in his veins and that carelessness of convention which it occasions.

To those members of the COMET staff who are taking chemistry 8 next term we leave the COMET office lab coat, which has been a fixture of that institution and the common property of COMET scientists for the last twelve terms, also to the COMET gymnasts we leave the COMET sneakers.

To Doctor Harry A. Potter, our principal, we leave those sections of architecture and masonry which we could not carry off as souvenirs of our fair school.

To next term's Senior Editors we leave the sleepless nights and racking hours spent in deciding the class celebrities, writing knocks and boosts and things like this.

To Mr. Fialkoff we leave—(oh well)—our good wishes.

To the incoming editors we leave a case of Aspirins or other headache deterrents that we forgot to buy.

To the Weise Studio we leave our negatives so that he may have a good laugh at our expense.

To Mr. Hirsh we leave a copyright blank together with a book of instructions for copyriting sonnets.

To the Eastern Printing Co., 14 Cook St., (adv.) we leave the presses and linotype machines and anything else that was too big to stuff into our pockets! Hear that yell?—"Copy, - Copy!!"—So long—.

In witness whereof we do hereby affix, append, sign or what have you—our signatures.

That with the graduation of the class of January '31, New Utrecht is going to be left desolate of its leading lights and greatest spirits.

That we're sorry to go.

That many of us are not going.

That New Utrecht should be called C. C. N. Y. Prep.

That absence makes the heart grow fonder. (Ask Dr. Leuchs.)

That this was printed to fill space.

That by the time one arrives at his Senior year one should have a complete repertoire of stories for all occasions.

That the Pro Viris Editor doesn't read all the books he reports on.

That all teachers should be like Miss Simpson.

That we've had a good time in high school.

That they made a mistake in picking the handsomest boy and girl because the reader of this is the best looking member of the class,—didn't his or her mother tell him or her so?

That stuff like this is spontaneous.

Eugene Jay Loveman

"And so after inviting your friends to a game dinner you were not served with any part of the bird?"

"Oh, Yes. I got the bill."

* * *

Visitor: "How does the land lie out this way?"

Native: "It isn't the land that lies; it's the real estate agents."

* * *

Aggravated Teacher: "Listen here, young man, are you the teacher of this class?"

Loud One: "No, sir, I'm not."

A. T.: "Then don't talk like an idiot."

* * *

"There!" exclaimed the Montana editor, as a bullet came through the window shattering the glass. "I knew that new 'personal' column would be a success.'

* * *

Officer: Flag of truce, Captain.

Captain: What do the revolutionists want?

Officer: They would like to exchange a couple of generals for a can of condensed milk.

"There is no rule without an exception?"

"Yes there is—a man must always be present when he is being shaved."

The new play was a failure. After the first act, many left the theatre; at the end of the second, most of the others started out. A cynical critic as he rose from his seat raised a restraining hand:

"Wait!" he commanded loudly, "women and children first!"

Teacher: "The sentence, 'My father had money,' is in the past tense. Now Johnny, what tense would you be speaking in, if you said, 'My father has money'."

Johnny: "Pretense."

Teacher: "What is space?"

Student: "I can't think of it now, but it's in my head."

* * *

"George," murmured the sweet girl, as she nestled close to him, "cigars are nothing but a habit."

"Yes, and you've succeeded in breaking one of my habits," said George sadly as he took the remains of a Havana from his waist coat pocket.

Zolotow: "What do you think of this last story of mine?"

Hek: "If it's your last, it's fine."

* * *

"Wasn't that Cleo driving past in that chariot?"

"Oh, no, it couldn't possibly have Ben Hur."

* * *

"My but you're covered with gore! How on earth did that happen?"

"Oh, one thing bled to another."

* * *

Chicago Cop: "Wotcha shootin' that guy for?"

Gangster: "None of your business."

Cop: "Don't get smart now or I'll run you in.

Doctor: "You'll be dead by morning."

Eskimo: "H'm, three months more, by gosh."

* * *

As one beast of prey said to another as he stuck his claws into him, "There's no talon where this'll end."

* * *

Ver: "I'm majoring in Greek, and you?"

Gil: "Latin."

Ver: "Well, we'll have to get to-gether and talk over old times."
